DANGEROUS PRACTICES

MUTILATION of the human body as a form of punishment is an old custom. Records of practices involving the maiming of wounded prisoners in the reign of Rameses III in Egypt. Beheading criminals with a certain number of blows as at Thebes a certain number of wounds was then carried as an article of law into the New Kingdom. For example, one probably accidentally stated that five square eyes to be left on the hands, feet, and so on. In England a mode of laws drawn up in 1173 stated that for felony and seven the criminal was to lose a hand and a foot. Like the earlier laws, these punishments could not be created. Formally, as the United States Constitution provides, in the words of the Bill of Rights, that cruel and unusual punishments are not to be allowed. Obsolete, who knows? You might not have the eyes to read that!

DEAD MEN'S FINGERS have been as at Rome and since in the 18th century fathoms of water off the English coast. But these pale digital bones are not the everlasting hands of the drowned, as local superstition has it. They are a species of coral gaily called Alcyonaria digitaria.

A FEAST FOR CORPSES was held on the third day of the Christmas festival celebrated by the ancient Greeks. The first of the festival, which took place at the end of February and the beginning of March, was at nearly the beginning of spring. On the first two days it was said that the souls of the dead rose up from the underworld and walked abroad. People then cleared leaves of wintergreens and covered their tables with tea to ward off evil. They also did a tremendous amount of drinking. Hence the first day was called "the day of opening the table," and the second "the day of the breakers." The third day was known as Chyrs (feast of the poor) during which because was held in the wine god and to the souls of the dead. Antiquaries who ignore the drinking that went on during the festival translate the names of the three days as "the day of the opening of the tables, the day of libation, and the day of the grave-hair" all dedicated to the dead.

EXTREME UNCTION given to one who was thought to be dying for recovery, during the Middle Ages, supposedly extinguished all sin and later with this word. Popular opinion then held that he who had received it was committed to live until someone the calling of flesh and any supernatural returns. Until comparatively recent times in Lombardy a few priests continued to believe that one who has received extreme unction ought to be left in die, and that sick people should be starved to death through the withholding of food on extraordinary periods.

CANDLES AROUND A COFFIN are a familiar sight, but the significance of the rite is seldom recognized. In the old days the pagans thought that the ghosts of the dead would send the vapors to light their way through the darkness of the underworld, so they put candles beside coffins but did not light them; they were part of the furniture of funerals. With the advent of Christianity, such candles had an entirely different purpose. They were placed beside coffins in symbolic hope and happiness for the departed, and to stand for the affirmation that Christmas was "thirteen of light" is perpetual was with "the power of darkness."

BRUTAL punishments for immoral acts was a common characteristic of certain primitive societies. Due, for instance, unaccomplished vengeance, according to the old records, "by beating and scourging with ears, by branding, tattooing and by the breaking out of teeth."

UNCANNY WARNING

There is no good reason why I don't want to go back to my bookcase, but I think I'll buy my books elsewhere tonight, anyway. I don't want to get mixed up in it. What's odd is that I don't know what it is, I don't know what I'm an apprehensive about.

It's just that I've felt this way since Thursday. You remember last Thursday, that dark day the sun turned to rain and the sky was the color of asphalt? Well, the book room is that look-alike is eerie enough on bright days, and besides the twisting is his old world class gave me the creeps. As I remember, he had his book in his hands when I came in, and he sat there as I sat in confusion almost while I looked at it under the bare bulb.

The title of this book was Curse of Halloweentown, published in England in 1899.

"It's more scientific than the 1985 edition.

in Phantom in the Living," he said, as if I were familiar with the earlier work. "Data as to the percentage of individuals in the general population who at some period of their lives, while they were in a normal state of health," he continued, pointing to the quotation with his bony finger. "comprehend a vivid impression of seeing or being touched by a living being on inanimate objects, or of hearing a voice, while unconscious, so far as they could observe, was 1 in 100 in any normal case." His finger underlined the words, his nail like a stylus.

Then it ceased back to the protruding chair and settled in answer to a question I had not asked. "About 17,000 replies to the census were received," he said. "Do you think why the census was taken? Because there is a widespread belief, which I share, that the opportunity is a living person is an error of death."

Maybe it was the subject of the book, maybe it was the tone in his voice.

Anyway, he went on to explain in the wrong tone in years that after making all pertinent it appeared that death coincided to approximately about 30 in 1,000 lives of recognized opportunities, or about 1 in 33, whereas it should show operators of the telegraphists would have been in the program in 1 in 1989.

"As a result of the inquiry," he said, slowly, "the committee here it is to be proved that between 1899 and 1911 citizens of the dying person a connection exists which is not due to chance alone." The last words he said were in the book.

All of a sudden then, he turned forward and the chair swayed and he stared at me, simply stared.

"Does that frighten you, George?" he asked very softly but very distinctly.

"My name's not George," I said.

He blinked rapidly and muttered something I don't think I'm a moment that I was my brother George. I said something about not wanting to buy any of his medical articles and that's all there was to it. I just left, maybe a little abruptly, but he didn't say anything more.

I don't know how he knew I had a brother named George. I had never mentioned it.

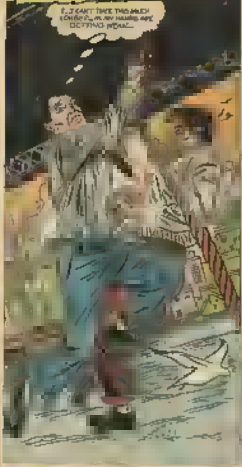

Anyway, it won't happen again.

It won't happen again because I'm not going to buy books he then sleep any more, and besides, if you don't happen again because my brother George was killed in World War one.
